Summary/Abstract: This research presents an analysis of influence of the global financial crisis and the following oil crisis on the EU integration trends in Norway. Our aim is to deduce the impact of the oil and gas industry on the economic situation and prosperity of Norway and indicate the effect of political and economic stability on the EU integration. The results of this research indicate that Norway prefers to stay outside the EU integration in times of crises as well, mainly due to significant profits from the petroleum industry, the country's ability to recover after crises and strong governmental support to stabilize the economy.
