

Professionalism and investment advisers

Aegis J. Frumento; Stephanie Korenman

+ Author & Article Information

Journal of Investment Compliance (2013) 14 (1): 32–41.

<https://doi.org/10.1108/15285811311321242>

Purpose

The purpose of this paper is to introduce the concept of professionalism into the current discussion of the proper scope of regulation of investment advisers.

Design/methodology/approach

The authors reviewed the scholarly literature on what constitutes a profession, the debates over the two bills introduced in Congress in 2012 concerning investment adviser regulation, and some of the studies that led up to those bills.

Findings

The authors concluded that professionalism could apply to some investment advisers, particularly financial planners, and that the development of such a profession should be encouraged. However, they found that such a profession would threaten the economic interests of broker-dealers and their registered representatives, whose routine use of such titles as “financial advisor” or “investment consultant” has led to consumer confusion over the different roles of brokers and advisers. Therefore broker-dealer interests favor more intense regulation of investment advisers by an SRO such as FINRA, presuming that would impair the development of a true profession of investment advisers.

Practical implications

This paper aims to ensure that the development of a true profession of investment advisers and/or financial planners is openly and fully debated if and when consideration of investment adviser regulation is reintroduced.

Originality/value

The role that professionalism can and should play in investment adviser regulation has not been previously discussed, even though broker-dealer registered representatives routinely use confusingly professional-

Keywords: Investment advisers, Financial planners, Financial advisers, Investment consultants, US Securities and Exchange Commission, Professions, Investments, Financial information

© Emerald Group Publishing Limited

You do not currently have access to this content.

Sign in

Don't already have an account? Register

Client Account

Email address / Username

Password

Reset password

Register

Access through your institution

Purchased this content as a guest? Enter your email address to restore access.

Email Address

Rental

This article is also available for rental through DeepDyve.

