

23 The Recording That Never Wanted to Be Heard and Other Stories of Sonification

Get access >

Jonathan Sterne, Mitchell Akiyama

<https://doi.org/10.1093/oxfordhb/9780195388947.013.0115> Pages 544–560Published: 21 November 2012

Abstract

This article uses the story of the phonograph as a way of investigating the development of a cluster of practices called “sonification,” or the transformation of nonsonic data into audible sound. It begins with introducing the phonograph and reasons as to why its study is relevant under the field of sound studies. It considers the possibility of listening to a phonograph recording as marking an aesthetic and epistemic shift in the history of sound. It then reviews a range of practices of sonification, all of which move data and experience between the sonic and nonsonic registers. This study advances three nested methodological propositions. It argues for attending to the modularity of sensory technologies, modularity of the relations between senses, subjects, and technologies, modularity of the senses themselves. Finally, the article concludes by returning to the case of the phonograph in order to advance some speculative propositions regarding the present conjuncture in the history of sound.

Keywords: phonograph, sonification, nonsonic data, audible sound, modularity

Subject: Applied Music, Sound Studies, Music

Series: Oxford Handbooks

Collection: Oxford Handbooks Online

You do not currently have access to this chapter.

Sign in

 Get help with access

Personal account

- Sign in with email/username & password
- Get email alerts
- Save searches
- Purchase content
- Activate your purchase/trial code
- Add your ORCID iD

Sign in >

Register

Institutional access

Sign in through your institution

Sign in through your institution

Sign in with a library card

Sign in with username/password

Recommend to your librarian

Institutional account management

Sign in as administrator

Purchase

Our books are available by subscription or purchase to libraries and institutions.

Purchasing information