Acknowledgments

Support from the Netherlands Institute for Advanced Study through the Visiting Scholar Grant 2010 is gratefully acknowledged. I am very grateful for the comments given by Dr Clemens Fuchs from the University of Applied Sciences Neubrandenburg (Germany).

Notes

Such subsidies are quite often accompanied by corruption; typically, farmers might apply for more inputs than they need and, with this approval of their needs from local authorities, they could sell the surplus for profit.

The price support is provided through state-owned Food Contract Corporation, established in 1997 for grain producers, and Mal Onimderi Corporation, established in 2001 for livestock producers.
