Abstract

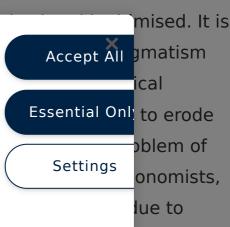

A tax rule whereby losses on a rental property are deductible against personal taxable income (commonly known as 'negative gearing') is an almost uniquely Australian practice. This article explores how this practice is legitimised and justified by politicians despite coherent criticisms that the practice misdirects investment into unproductive asset speculation causing house price inflation and inequality. This article uses critical 11 Rental legislation in NSW offers little security of tenure outside of the industry-standard six-month term of most residential tenancy leases, with a 30-day notice of termination period required if the landlord wishes to sell their property and a 90-day notice of termination period for 'no grounds' (no reason) termination. There is no limit on the quanta of rent increase provided proper notice is given.
