Notes

- 1 As an anonymous reviewer pointed out, though, it is important to acknowledge that the SIDS rhetoric here around livelihoods etc. is often far from reality, where it is often more aligned with the interests of transnational corporations.
- 2 The debates on the appropriateness of primitive accumulation vs. accumulation by dispossession are central to the work of David Harvey (2003). The concept of 'accumulation by dispossession' is also central to the work of David Harvey (2003) and is discussed in detail in the book 'Accumulation by Dispossession' (Harvey 2003). The concept of 'accumulation by dispossession' is also central to the work of David Harvey (2003) and is discussed in detail in the book 'Accumulation by Dispossession' (Harvey 2003).
- 3 Àrnasson (2011) discusses the role of the state in the development of the SIDS. The role of the state is also discussed in the book 'Accumulation by Dispossession' (Harvey 2003).

- 6 Interview with Carsten Pedersen, 15 June 2015.
- 7 Though, see also the book 'Accumulation by Dispossession' (Harvey 2003) for an overview of the concept of 'accumulation by dispossession'.

9 As pointed out in the document, 'coastal' in this instance refers to all fisheries within the EEZ.

11 See also the report Our shared seas: a 2017 overview of ocean threats and conservation funding by the California Environmental Associates (2017, 18-21) that makes the same point.
