appropriated to existing relationships, temporal structures and rationalities guiding everyday life. New subjectivities emerge and a novel financial logic is applied to everyday life mostly in cases when the take-for-granted course of events breaks down: when mortgages are denied and people face payment difficulties and defaults. In these cases, previous routines of rationality are questioned, relationships are put to (a financial) test and time frames are revaluated according a financial logic.

Zsuzsanna Vargha is Lecturer (Assistant Professor) in Accounting and Organization at the School of Management, University of Leicester. She received her PhD in Sociology from Columbia University and held postdoctoral positions at the Max Planck Institute for the Study of Societies and at the Department of Accounting, London School of Economics and Political Science. She has published on post-socialist advertising (Theory and Society 2010) and on demonstrating financial products to consumers (Organization 2011). Her research interests lie at the intersection of marketing, finance and accounting, in problems of consumer culture and market calculation.

Note: Léna Pellandini Simányi is the first author; Ferenc Hammer and Zsuzsanna Vargha are both second authors.

Notes

1 For a discussion of the different uses of financialization, see French et al. (2011).

5 Between 2003 and 2010 the total value of mortgages rose from 1.5 billion to 4.4 billion Hungarian Forints, due almost exclusively to Forex mortgages. From few thousand in 2000, by 2011 15.2 percent of households held a mortgage, with roughly 300 thousand families holding Forex mortgages and the same number holding Forint mortgages in a population of under 10 million (KSH 2011, 2014).

- 6 See also Zelizer (1985).
- 7 Even Weber's instrumental rationality falls into this group; see also Garfinkel's 'rationalities' (Garfinkel 1967) and anthropologists' references to everyday arithmetic (Lave 1988).
- 8 Note that our focus is not on analysing mortgage meetings as calculative spaces and sites of qualculation (for similar see Vargha 2011). Rather, we look at how the mortgage takes on a life beyond that site, in other, everyday calculative spaces.
