demonstrated to exist in transition countries. Combined with widespread usage of tax holidays, subsidies and acquisition discounts, it is not certain that positive direct effects equate with economic growth in these countries.

Notes

¹The experiences of the CIS countries are considered to be in a category of their own. This will become more clear in the section below, 'Explaining FDI inflows'.

²See for example Campos and Kinoshita (2003), Altomonte and Guagliano (2003), Carstensen and Toubal (2004), Disdier and Mayer (2004), Frenkel et al. (2004), Walkenhorst (2004) and Janicki and Wunnava (2004).

³However, the 'servisation' of the world economy breaks with the old stages approach to economic development (Chenery & Taylor 1968, pp. 391 - 416). For example, developing countries relying more heavily on 'servisation' in relation to tourism rather than traditional industrialisation are also bound to attract relatively more FDI in service industries.

⁴Poland, followed by Bulgaria, 1994.

⁵Owing to the presence of investors (networks), are also realisations by Estrin (2001).

⁶Even though EBRD, private industry.

⁷Note that foreign investors is often viewed as a negative or surrendering policy from a development perspective (Easterly 2001).

⁸However, reinvested earnings are not taxed in Estonia. Estonia also has a major advantage over the other Baltic States in terms of her cultural affinities with Finland.

⁹Some companies in labour-intensive industries will disinvest and move their production to third countries and some efficiency seeking FDI may favour EU or third countries over the transition countries, which may also mean de-facto disinvestment.

¹⁰For Estonia see Varblane and Ziacik (1999), Hannula and Tamm (2003), Jones and Mygind (2002) and Sinani and Meyer (2004). For the Czech Republic see Zemplerova & Benacek (1997) and Djankov and Hoekman (2000). For Hungary see Bosco (2001) and Sgard (2001). For Poland see Zukowska-Gagelmann (2000) and Jensen (2004). For Romania see Hunya (2002b). For Slovenia see Rojec (1998). In addition there also exist a number of edited books on this topic that are not mentioned in the survey here for sake of brevity.

¹¹For a central theoretical exposure in relation to FDI see Narula and Dunning (2000).
