Abstract

This essay considers the impact of economic statecraft, used by both Western countries and Russia in the aftermath of Russia's annexation of Crimea in March 2014, on political economy in Russia. The first part of the essay assesses the impact that economic statecraft had on the performance of the Russian economy in the period 2014–2015. The second half of the essay considers how economic statecraft has shaped the development of the system of political economy in Russia. It is argued that the available evidence indicates that economic statecraft has resulted in several unintended consequences, including the strengthening of elite cohesion, and a creeping 'securitisation' of economic policy in Russia.

Notes

The author would like to thank Julian Cooper, Philip Hanson and Silvana Malle for comments made on previous iterations of this essay. In addition, the insightful comments provided by two anonymous reviewers are gratefully acknowledged. Lucy Buckland also provided helpful research assistance. The usual disclaimers apply.

¹ For a broad discussion of economic statecraft, see Baldwin (1985); and for a discussion of the West's use of economic statecraft in relation to the Soviet Union during the Cold War, see Hanson (1988).

² The terminology of the statecraft literature refers to the country or countries imposing economic measures as 'sender' countries, while the country (or countries) that is the object of statecraft is described as the 'target' country.

⁴ David Cameron stated in November 2014 that sanctions were behind the poor economic performance of Russia at that time (Wintour 2014). US President, Barack Obama, went even further, claiming that sanctions had left the Russian economy 'in tatters'. See, 'Obama Says Western Sanctions Have Left Russia's Economy "In Tatters"', The Moscow Times, 21 January 2015, available at: <http://www.themoscowtimes.com/business/article/obama-says-western-sanctions-have-left-russia-s-economy-in-tatters/514671.html>, accessed 20 August 2015.

³⁶ More effective instruments could have included, for example, a greater emphasis on military responses to Russian assertiveness, or on intensified efforts to target Russian elite assets in the West.
