Abstract

The notion of rights is a powerful one, but the channels through which they have been promoted and enforced since World War II have militated against the more radical promise of rights. These explorations examine the question of economic rights with an international focus. The contributions touch on such diverse topics as the international peasant federation called La Vía Campesina, heterodox and social economic analyses, and the informal sector. The authors address the question of human rights with respect to the conditions that delimit and enforce these rights, the connections between macroeconomics and human rights, social movements that strive to protect these rights, and the different theoretical approaches to incorporating rights into an academic framework. Though each contribution's methodology and focus are different, the composite takes an important step in evaluating this very critical question of economic rights that greatly affects individual lives, social conditions, economic policies, and the study of economics.

Acknowledgments

Rajeev Patel is very grateful to Radhika Balakrishnan, Anita Nayar, Daria Roithmayr, four anonymous reviewers, and the discussants at the 2003 IAFPE Conference workshop at which a version of this paper was first presented, supported by the Ford Foundation. The usual disclaimers apply.

Radhika Balakrishnan would like to thank Uma Narayan for early input into this work and David Gillcrust and Mehlika Hoodbhoy for helping structure the argument in this paper. She would especially like to thank the referees from the journal for their invaluable comments and input.

Uma Narayan's work on issues relating to the informal sector began in Fall 2003 with the support of a Rockefeller Fellowship on the theme of “Confronting Global Capital, Finding Human Security: A Gendered Critique” organized by the National Council for Research on Women and the Center for the Study of Women and Society at the City University of New York. Her ideas have benefited from conversations with other fellows and with the participants in the seminars organized around the fellowship. She would like to thank all of them. She would also like to thank Radhika Balakrishnan and the reviewers for their help with this essay.

Notes

¹ NGOs cannot, as a result of La Via Campesina's founding constitutional principles, become members of the organization. There are, however, friendly relations between a handful of organizations and La Via Campesina's secretariat. The Foodfirst Information Action Network has launched the Global Campaign for Agrarian Reform, and La Via Campesina representatives sit on the steering committee for that project. Specifically, the Foodfirst Information and Action Network is looking to use the UN General Comment 12 to argue for a robust framework of economic, social, and cultural rights, in addition to civil and political rights for people living in rural areas (UN – Committee on Economic, Social, and Cultural Rights [UNCESCR]1999).

² Some of the initial ideas in this paper were a result of long conversations with Uma Narayan.

⁹ The dialogue between these two frameworks has already begun. The Ford Foundation funded an initial meeting; for the report, see Radhika Balakrishnan (2005).
