Abstract

The Glasgow gangs of the 1920s and 1930s were widely viewed as fighting gangs rather than as criminal gangs in any wider sense. Retrospective accounts frequently suggest that the gangs only fought each other, leaving 'ordinary' residents of the city's working-class districts safe from the threat of robbery or random assault. Sheffield witnessed a violent struggle between two gangs for control of the pitch and toss ring at 'Sky Edge' on the outskirts of the city centre during the 1920s, but no evidence has thus far been uncovered of a pattern of on-going gang formation in the city during the 1920s and 1930s. [37] The levying of 'protection' from illicit businesses was rarely highlighted in the local press for obvious reasons. Those targeted could hardly bring criminal charges, and journalists were unlikely to crusade on their behalf. For a hint of extortion from gaming houses, see the Evening Citizen, 30 January 1928, for a report of a police raid which was greeted with relief after the doorkeeper initially feared the intruders to be gang members. For accounts of extortion from bookmakers, see the Weekly Record, 12 July 1930; Sunday Dispatch, 10 March 1935; Sunday Mail, 16 August 1936. For a fictional depiction of gangs targeting brothel keepers, see McArthur and Watts, No Bad Money. Forbes and Meehan claimed that the gangs with greater criminal ambitions organised shebeens, Such Bad Company, 65.
