Abstract

The market, not the government, is that last best hope for actual and future potential victims of hurricanes. State subsidies have perverted locational settlement decision-making. They have acted in such a manner as to encourage people to build in more dangerous areas than they otherwise would have. By the government undertaking part of the costs of rebuilding in the aftermath of storms, it has encouraged irrational settlement patterns, which have led, in turn, to needless loss of life and wealth.

Notes

<sup>1</sup> I have been a resident of New Orleans since fall 2001. Many of the considerations in this paper emanate from that experience. I wish to thank an editor for several suggestions that greatly improved an earlier draft of this paper. I alone of course am responsible for any remaining errors.

<sup>4</sup> The Edsel was at one time emblematic of the failure of the marketplace. This is a misinterpretation of colossal dimensions. Rather, it was a failed line of the Ford Motor Company, which was very quickly jettisoned: <http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Edsel>;
<http://www.libertyhaven.com/regulationandpropertyrights/tradeandinternationaleconomics/risefall.html>. Imagine, though, if the government were responsible for such a disaster. Then, there would be little or no economic incentives to cut one's losses and end this product that was rejected by consumers. One might reasonably think of the US Post Office as a governmental Edsel. See on this Adie (1993).

<sup>12</sup> Were any private enterprise half as inefficient as FEMA or the Army Corp of Engineers, there is little doubt they would have long disappeared from the scene in bankruptcy court. In the event, these two government agencies were given additional funds in the wake of their abject failures.

<sup>16</sup> In contrast, I do not recommend the American Red Cross. I still have not forgiven them for being so politically correct that they accepted blood from homosexuals, and infected hundreds of people with AIDS (<http://www.aegis.com/news/sc/1992/SC921205.html>), many of them hemophiliacs (<http://www.aegis.com/news/lt/1993/LT931113.html>). Unhappily, from my own point of view, Wal-Mart, the evil firm that it is, sent another $1 million to the Red Cross.
