Abstract

This paper delineates how stockbrokers in Mumbai negotiate (contest, reconcile and appropriate) global finance. In recent years, the social studies of finance have grown profoundly, enhancing our understanding of finance across disciplinary boundaries. However, the way in which global finance is practised by local stockbrokers in non-western financial markets has received minor attention. Even though the Mumbai financial market is comparatively small, it is an instructive case due to a transition of financial practices over the previous two decades. Despite these rapid changes, the Bombay Stock Exchange (BSE), the oldest exchange in India, and its 'traditional' brokers remain active and relatively influential. Drawing on present-day experiences as well as historical recollections of BSE stockbrokers, this article shows that global finance is not an unambiguous or predictable force, but instead negotiated and thus actively shaped by local stockbrokers.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

First of all I would like to thank Prof. Dr Marieke de Goede. Without your support, close readings and valuable insights, this article would probably not yet have been written. I express my sincere gratitude to the Indian Institute of Technology, Bombay. For their support during fieldwork, I thank Tulsi Mehrotra Menon, Jan Berings, Manpreet Chand, Anneke van Walsem and Molly Fitzpatrick. Finally, a tremendous amount of 'thank yous' go out to the people who made this study possible: to the friendly BSE employees and hospitable stockbrokers in and around the Phiroze Jeejeebhoy Towers.
