Looking Back in Order to Move Forward: The Politics of Evolving Sub-National Economic Policy Architecture

LEE PUGALIS

Durham County Council; County Durham Economic Partnership; and School of Architecture, Planning and Landscape, Newcastle University, UK

Introduction

Based on insights ‘in the English field’ over the past decade, I take a brief look back at New Labour’s economic policy architecture as a means to postulate on its reconfiguration under the incumbent Liberal Democrat–Conservative (Lib-Con) Coalition Government. In particular, I reflect on my time devising spatial policy, economic strategies and regeneration

RDAs have received funding through a Single Programme budget (known as the 'single pot') since April 2002.

<sup>3</sup> The present sponsor for RDAs is the Department for Business, Innovation and Skills (BIS).

<sup>4</sup> One only has to take a glance at each of the nine RDAs' corporate plans, investment priorities and plethora of strategies, to appreciate that they have an extensive remit, but, arguably of more interest, is each RDAs spatially-flavoured economic development approach. Some have prioritised place quality enhancements and physical regeneration, whilst others have looked to innovation or enterprise, which is reflected in the organisational structures of each RDA, with some opting to utilise local delivery partners more than others.

<sup>5</sup> At the time of writing in September 2010, it is anticipated that some activities, such as inward investment, innovation and business support, will be 'led' nationally, however, it remains to be seen whether implementation would be led from a single national base.
