

Quarterly Review of Film and Video >

Volume 25, 2008 - Issue 5

609 | 0
Views | CrossRef citations to date | Altmetric

Reviews

The Matrix Trilogy: Cyberpunk Reloaded

edited by Stacy Gillis. London: Wallflower Press, 2005

Steven Woodward

Pages 442-447 | Published online: 10 Sep 2008

Cite this article <https://doi.org/10.1080/10509200601021596>

Sample our Humanities
Journals

>> Sign in here to start your access to the latest two volumes for 14 days

Full Article

Figures & data

Citations

Metrics

Reprints & Permissions

Read this article

Share

agree, for example, his inclusion of police procedurals in his category of film noir. Police procedurals tend to present protagonists who are stable and conservative team players and who utilize technology and science to solve crimes whereas film noir tends to present tough guy loners, who use their street smarts, fists, and guns to see justice served. Although Dimendberg explains that he wanted to avoid becoming bogged down in an attempt to define film noir, as he notes so many other critics have attempted to do, a precise sense of his criteria—especially his distinction between early and late film noir—might have helped clarify a few aspects of the discussion; however, this, by no means, presents a major flaw in his argument. Most intriguing, perhaps, would have been if Dimendberg argued that the defining feature of the cycle of film noir—and what differentiated it from classical Hollywood films of the same period—was their representation of the city.

Dimendberg presents a thoroughly innovative approach to film noir that takes it from generic definition and corpus quibbling much more firmly into the realm of cultural studies with an examination of the cycle's close relationship to American culture at the time through the representation of the city. And, hopefully, it will give new direction to the discussion of the cycle—or mood, or tone, or style, or genre—of film noir. As Dimendberg notes, “Tensions between centripetal and centrifugal spatial tendencies provide an important key to understanding the film noir cycle of the 1940s and 1950s” (171).

Philippa Gates is an assistant professor in English and Film Studies at Wilfrid Laurier University in Canada. Her research interests include gender and genre in classical and contemporary Hollywood film. She is currently completing a book on masculinity and the Hollywood detective film, forthcoming with SUNY Press

The Matrix Trilogy: Cyberpunk Reloaded*, edited by Stacy Gillis. London: Wallflower Press, 2005

STEVEN WOODWARD

Ironically, the idea that the world we inhabit may, in fact, be an illusion, a projection, or a simulation has become an ubiquitous subject of pop-culture rumination, in our cybernetic world, in the illusions of the movies: The Truman Show (1998), eXistenZ (1999), and The Island (2005) are just a few of the most recent features to toy with an idea that perhaps first found imaginative form in western philosophy with Plato's allegory of the cave of shadows. The Wachowski brothers' Matrix trilogy, however, is no doubt remarkable for the apparent philosophical rigor with which this same idea, given a futuristic spin but essentially reflecting the circumstances of our contemporary, post-industrial life, is probed and explored. Showing Neo in possession of a copy of Jean Baudrillard's Simulacra and Simulation early in the first film (a book which the principle cast were instructed to read), the Matrix trilogy sets itself up as ideal grist for an academic mill which is increasingly adapting itself to the study of popular culture, the now-seamless Matrix that pervades our own lives.

Indeed, in her introduction to this new contributory volume on the subject, Stacey Gillis defends the importance of the Matrix trilogy not with reference to the popular success of the films, which diminished massively with the release of the second and third parts, but

Acknowledgments

Steven Woodward is Assistant Professor of Film and Literature at Bishop's University in Lennoxville, Quebec. He is the editor of the book After Kieślowski: The Legacy of Krzysztof Kieślowski and the author of numerous articles on such subjects as architecture in Peter Jackson's Lord of the Rings, villains in the James Bond movies, and cinematic depictions of girls who kill.

Log in via your institution

> Access through your institution

Log in to Taylor & Francis Online

> Log in

Restore content access

> Restore content access for purchases made as guest

Purchase options *

Save for later

PDF download + Online access

- 48 hours access to article PDF & online version
- Article PDF can be downloaded
- Article PDF can be printed

EUR 48.00

 Add to cart

Issue Purchase

- 30 days online access to complete issue
- Article PDFs can be downloaded
- Article PDFs can be printed

EUR 214.00

 Add to
cart

* Local tax will be added as applicable

People also read

Recommended articles

Cited by

Towards the feminine sublime, or the story of 'a twinkling monad, shape-shifting across dimension': intermediality, fantasy and special effects in cyberpunk fil... >

Livia Monnet

Japan Forum

Published online: 9 Dec 2010

Information for

Authors

R&D professionals

Editors

Librarians

Societies

Opportunities

Reprints and e-prints

Advertising solutions

Accelerated publication

Corporate access solutions

Open access

Overview

Open journals

Open Select

Dove Medical Press

F1000Research

Help and information

Help and contact

Newsroom

All journals

Books

Keep up to date

Register to receive personalised research and resources by email

Sign me up

Copyright © 2026 Informa UK Limited Privacy policy

Cookies Terms & conditions Accessibility

Registered in England & Wales No. 01072954
5 Howick Place | London | SW1P 1WG

Taylor & Francis
by informa