Alec Baldwin's appearances on Saturday Night Live: tangerine wig, Twitter backlash, and the humanising of President Donald J. Trump

ARTICLE HISTORY Received 17 October 2019; Accepted 12 December 2019

For more than three years, Alec Baldwin, comic actor and recurring Saturday Night Live host, has been making regular guest appearances on the NBC variety programme clad in a tangerine wig and business suit (Nir 2016). These appearances, which began in October 2016 when Donald Trump was still just the Republican candidate for the US Presidency, have continued well into Trump's first term as president (Politi 2016). In fact, since the fall of 2016, the cast of SNL has taken great pains to mock key figures in the Trump administration and the surrounding Republican orbit with special guests and cast regulars. (Brice-Saddler 2018).

Many have compared this SNL effort to the Tina Fey/Sarah Palin parodies from the 2008 election that had a clear effect on perceptions of the McCain/Palin ticket and the likelihood of voting for the Republican party (Baumgartner et al. 2012). The central argument is that SNL has again moved away from light-hearted parody to more satirical and pointed political caricatures (Robinson 2018). Rather than simply mock when it comes to Trump and his presidency, SNL is in full-on attack mode (Itzkoff 2017).

Despite SNL's efforts to paint a broad picture of the Trump administration, Baldwin's continued portrayal of Trump truly stands out as historically significant. What began as an engaging comic exercise for Baldwin has turned into a bit of a political and professional burden (Jones 2017). Buoyed by the initial public reaction to the sketches, Baldwin has
