

The Washington Quarterly >

Volume 30, 2007 - Issue 1

1,271 | 10

Views | CrossRef citations to date | Altmetric

3

Inside Iran

Understanding Iran's New Authoritarianism

Elliot Hen-Tov

Pages 163-179 | Published online: 05 Jan 2010

Cite this article <https://doi.org/10.1162/wash.2006-07.30.1.163>

Sample our Politics & International Relations Journals

>> Sign in here to start your access to the latest two volumes for 14 days

Citations

Metrics

Reprints & Permissions

Read this article

Share

Elliot Hen-Tov

Understanding Iran's New Authoritarianism

Mahmoud Ahmadinejad's victory in the June 2005 Iranian presidential elections and his confrontational politics highlight two remarkable aspects of Iran's political development. First, it indicates that Iran is in fact undergoing a gradual process of regime change, not moving toward democratization but rather modifying Iran's brand of authoritarianism. It constitutes the beginning of a marked shift from the existing clerical theocracy toward a more conventional authoritarian regime. Two threats have created the need for more effective authoritarian governance to secure Iran's clerical regime: the internal challenge by the reformist opposition and the external threat of U.S. intervention posed to Iran in the post-September 11 world. This transition will therefore see remnant democratic features erode as the evolving regime concentrates power among a small number of key decisionmaking centers. Similar to other authoritarian regimes, the role of the military-security apparatus will be enhanced, as will the regime's dependence on tools of patronage or repression to assert full control.

Second, in contrast to many ill-fated predictions regarding Iran, the domestic political economy underpinning the regime is surprisingly stable in the medium term. Profound structural problems in Iran's economy will prevent the leadership from implementing the China model—authoritarianism with high economic growth—but Iran's oil-based economy nevertheless provides the regime with sufficient resources to satisfy its supporter base and discourage opposition. If anything, the potential but unlikely international isolation of Iran if Tehran mishandles its apparent quest for nuclear weapons represents a greater threat to regime stability than Iran's economic condition.

Elliot Hen-Tov is a doctoral candidate specializing in contemporary Iranian and Turkish affairs in the Department of Near Eastern Studies at Princeton University.

© 2006-07 by The Center for Strategic and International Studies and the Massachusetts Institute of Technology
The Washington Quarterly • 30:1 pp. 163-179.

Additional information

Notes on contributors

Elliot Hen-Tov is a doctoral candidate specializing in contemporary Iranian and Turkish affairs in the Department of Near Eastern Studies at Princeton University.

Log in via your institution

› Access through your institution

Log in to Taylor & Francis Online

› Log in

Restore content access

› Restore content access for purchases made as guest

Purchase options *

Save for later

Article Purchase

- 48 hours access to article PDF & online version
- Article PDF can be downloaded
- Article PDF can be printed

EUR 39.00

 Add to cart

Issue Purchase

- 30 days online access to complete issue
- Article PDFs can be downloaded
- Article PDFs can be printed

EUR 217.00

 Add to cart

* Local tax will be added as applicable

People also read

Recommended articles

Cited by 10

Information for

Authors

R&D professionals

Editors

Librarians

Societies

Opportunities

Reprints and e-prints

Advertising solutions

Accelerated publication

Corporate access solutions

Open access

Overview

Open journals

Open Select

Dove Medical Press

F1000Research

Help and information

Help and contact

Newsroom

All journals

Books

Keep up to date

Register to receive personalised research and resources
by email

 Sign me up

  